So why is hiring, which matters more than any of them, still in the dark ages?

Hiring is the last customer journey nobody has redesigned.

Three people are looking for work.

Salford

Priya

Two years as a barista. Weekends only, and no car.

“I’m looking for weekend shop work in Manchester.”

Preston

Zara

A dispenser, three days a week.

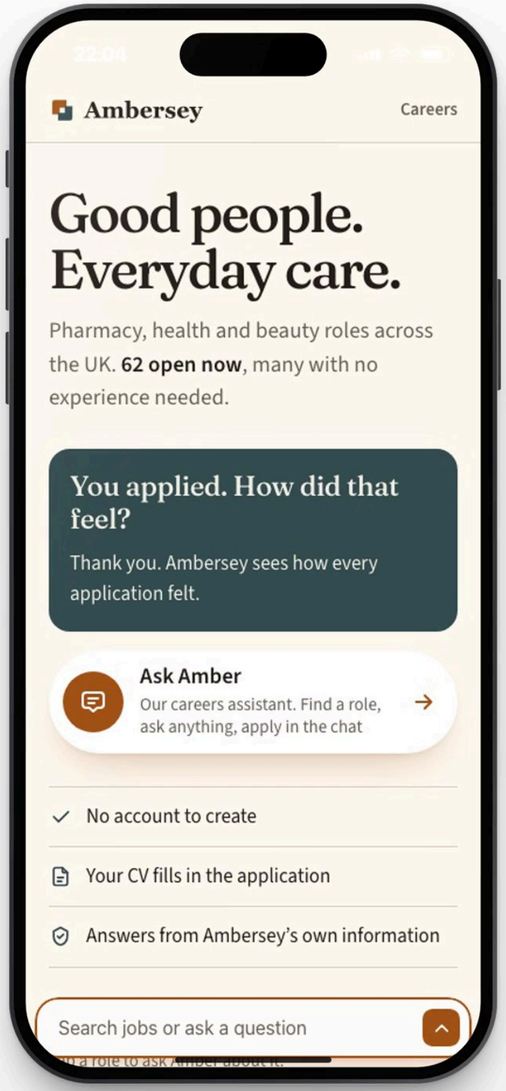

“We’re hoping to start a family in the next year or two.”

Coventry

Ellie

A café assistant who can only work school hours.

“I can’t do late finishes. What do the shifts really look like?”

People remember how it felt.
Not how long it took.

candidates are happy whether applying took 2 minutes or an hour.

So we design for how it feels, and we ask.

The peak-end rule: we judge an experience by its sharpest moment and how it ended, and barely notice how long it lasted (Fredrickson and Kahneman, 1993). inploi data: 11,513 ratings from people who finished applying, September 2026. The curve is drawn to show the idea.
